STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:
Architecturally one of the most unusual downtown buildings, this elaborately eclectic fantasy reflects the cultural interests of its original owner/occupants who utilized Moorish motifs in their ceremonies. The facade, with Byzantine arches and filigree lattice work, is primarily of ornate polychrome terra cotta with a granite water table. The ground floor houses a commercial garage with neon signage. ISLAM TEMPLE (ALCAZAR THEATER)
STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Cont.)

This building is successor to the original Alcazar Theater which was located on O'Farrell Street and first opened in 1885. The original Alcazar, a family theater beloved to San Francisco residents, was also designed in a Moorish style. It was destroyed in the 1906 earthquake and rebuilt shortly thereafter. In the 1910's the Alcazar was one of the four major theaters in San Francisco. After the rebuilt Alcazar on O'Farrell Street was torn down in 1963 to make room for a parking lot, a new 499-seat Alcazar Theater reopened in the present building at 650 Geary Street.

The present building, constructed at a cost of $150,000, was declared "one of the finest shrine temples in America" (Bulletin, 1/26/18). The temple was "an adaptation from Alhambra, a building that stands as the highest mark of Arabian art and civilization." (Architect & Engineer, June 1917).

5. Architect (continued)
T. Paterson Ross was himself a Shriner, but he was also a prominent local architect whose career spanned the years 1890-1924. He was especially productive in the post-earthquake years. His commissions of over 250 structure include such important commercial buildings as Sing Fat (1907) 555-97 Grant Avenue, Sing Chong (1908) at 615 Grant Avenue, the Donohoe Building (Imperial Savings Building) (1908) at 99 Battery Street, the Baldwin Hotel, 321 Grant Street (1910), The Union League Building (now the Press Club) (1922) at 555 Post Street. Some of the extent residential buildings include 2210 Clay Street (1904), 21 Presidio Terrace (1910), the Chatham Apartments at 1750 Sacramento Street (1912), Capo di Monte at 2111 Hyde Street (1924), and 433 Arguello Boulevard (1896) which was built as his own residence.

9. Patterns of History (continued)
combined with the Middle Eastern influence to create a new style that was popular with theaters. This particular building also reflects an era when influential fraternal organizations built elaborate ritualized meeting halls.
